Dear Carl:

I am very proud of the fact that CCA delivers meaningful public service to its many government customers, and we are equally proud of the commitment of our employees delivering programs to the inmates that we have in our care; be it education, or vocational training or addiction treatment or counseling or life skills. We find that we are assisting inmates as they prepare themselves to leave incarceration and hopefully become productive citizens again. The one thing that we've learned that we can prepare these inmates in many ways, but if they can become a new person because they are given the opportunity and exposure to many of the faith based programs that we align ourselves with that their chances of succeeding after release are much greater. One of the things that I have been most proud of is that here in Nashville there is a program that works with inmates prerelease as well as aftercare and that's Men of Valor. It's a program that we've seen tremendous success and we're happy to partner with them in a program they call the "Jericho Project" in which we're seeing the lives change of over a 100 inmates who one day will have the opportunity to get back in the community and we know that Men of Valor will work with these individuals. In many of the faith based programs that I have been involved with, that my wife Carole and I have seen, this is one para church organization that we personally feel very strongly about and have agreed to support in addition to providing CCA support.

Sincerely,

John Ferguson
